

CHRISTIANITY AT A CROSSROADS

A Four-Part Documentary, Lunch & Conversation Series

Filmed across the country, the series explores the changing face of Christianity in America through the voices of pastors, theologians, historians, sociologists, journalists, researchers, church leaders, and people trying to figure out what faith means in their lives.

We'll see churches struggling to survive. We'll meet congregations that are thriving. We'll hear from people who have left the church—and from people who remain deeply committed to their faith.

And then we'll talk.

We'll gather each week for lunch, the documentary, and conversation.

Bring a dish to share!

Bring something you enjoy—homemade or store-bought. We'll put it all together and share a meal as we watch and talk about some of the biggest questions facing Christianity today.

This isn't a Bible study.

It isn't a debate.

And you don't have to have all the answers.

Come if you love the church.

Come if you're frustrated with the church.

Come if you've left the church.

Come if you're questioning your faith.

Come if you're simply curious about what is happening to Christianity in America.

We'll ask some big questions:

Why are people leaving the church?

What are people looking for instead?

What is worth preserving in Christianity?

What needs to change?

Is Christianity declining—or transforming?

And perhaps the biggest question of all:

If Christianity is at a crossroads, which road will we choose?

This Advent season, as we tell the story of a faith born in an unexpected place and centered on the possibility of something new, it seems like a particularly good time to have this conversation.

Good food. Great film. Honest conversation. Big questions.

Join us for one afternoon or all four.

Everyone is welcome. Bring a dish and join the conversation!
